Santorum Upends GOP Contest

Energized by 3 wins, candidate works to replenish his coffers

Allen, Texas

One day after Rick Santorum's startling breakthrough in the presidential race, his few aides decamped to distant states to start building campaign organizations from scratch. It was evidence of his challenge in converting sudden momentum into victories in the rush of contests ahead.

"We definitely are the campaign right now with the momentum, the enthusiasm on the ground," the former Pennsylvania senator said Wednesday, hours after capturing Republican caucuses in Minnesota and Colorado and a non-binding primary in Missouri. "We feel like going forward we're going to have the money we need to make the case we want."

To replenish his coffers, Santorum arranged a weekend of fundraising events in California. He plans to start campaigning in Washington state on Monday, and then Ohio and Michigan in the following days.

In a fundraising letter to supporters, Santorum appealed to conservatives and likened his situation to the one Ronald Reagan encountered in 1976 when he challenged President Gerald R. Ford for the GOP nomination.

At the same time, aides conceded he was making little or no effort in the caucuses in Maine that end this weekend, and they are still working on plans for competing in primaries in Michigan and Arizona on Feb. 28, as well as the delegate-rich, 10-state Super Tuesday a week later.

"We're always going to have a huge spending gap, but money can't buy people's hearts," said Ron Carey, an unpaid volunteer.

Santorum's caucus successes vaulted him ahead of Newt Gingrich into second place in the competition for Republican National Convention delegates. The Associated Press count showed Mitt Romney leading with 107 delegates, followed by Santorum with 69, Gingrich with 32 and Ron Paul with 9.

L.A. School Abuse Case Grows

found, police say

Los Angeles

Investigators said Wednesday they have found 200 additional photos they believe were taken by a former teacher who is accused of committing lewd acts on 23 children over a five-year period.

The photos were found late last week at the same pharmacy where a photo lab technician had first noticed odd pictures that led to Mark Berndt's arrest, said sheriff's Lt. Carlos Marquez. The recent discovery brings the total number of photos to roughly 600.

Many of the photos involve children from Miramonte Elementary School already identified by authorities, but there may be other poten-

The mother of an 11-year-old boy at Miramonte Elementary School said that a teacher's aide, a woman the mother said appeared to be in her 50s, sent at least three letters to her son in 2009, including one that said: "When you get close to me, even if you give me the chills, I like that. Don't tell nobody about this!" The mother said she went to the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department, which directed her to the school. During a meeting, the teacher's aide acknowledged writing letters and said she had a grandmotherly affection for the boy. The aide no longer works for the school system. (AP) Berndt has been charged with lewd acts on children between 2005 and 2010. He remains jailed on $23 million bail and could face life in prison if convicted.

The furor led two parents to come forward Thursday to complain that teacher Martin Springer fondled two second-grade girls in his classroom. Springer, 49, pleaded not guilty Tuesday after he was charged with committing lewd acts upon one girl in 2009. Bail was set at $300,000.

Investigators said they know of no connection between the men. Berndt and Springer took their classes on at least two joint field trips in the past decade.

All 120 staff members at Miramonte will be replaced as of Thursday after a two-day school shutdown as part of Los Angeles Unified School District's investigation. CHRISTINA HOAG (AP)

FEMA to Waive Disaster Debts

New Orleans

The Federal Emergency Management Agency announced Wednesday that it is rolling out a plan to waive debts for many victims of Hurricane Katrina and other disasters who may have mistakenly received millions of dollars in aid.

The debts, which average about $4,622 per recipient, represent slightly less than 5 percent of the roughly $8 billion that FEMA distributed to victims of Katrina and other 2005 storms. Some of the overpayments were caused by FEMA employees' own mistakes, ranging from clerical errors to failing to interview applicants, according to congressional testimony.

FEMA is expected to mail out roughly 90,000 letters next week

Backstory

Last year, the Federal Emergency Management Agency sent out debt notices in an effort to recover more than $385 million it says was improperly paid to victims of Hurricanes Katrina, Rita and Wilma in 2005. In December, Congress approved legislation for FEMA to waive many of the debts. (AP)

Study: Generation Job Gap Widens

Employment level for young adults lowest since WWII

Washington

Squeezed by a tight job market, young Americans are especially struggling. They have suffered bigger income losses than other age groups and are less likely to be employed than at any time since World War II.

An analysis by the Pew Research Center, released Thursday, details the impact of the recent recession on the attitudes of a generation of mostly 20- and 30-somethings.

With government data showing record gaps in employment between young and old, a Pew survey found that 41 percent of Americans believe that younger adults have been hit harder than any other group, compared with 29 percent who say middle-aged Americans and 24 percent who point to seniors 65 and older. A wide majority of the public — at least 69 percent — also said it's more difficult for today's young adults than their parents' generation to pay for college, find a job, buy a home or save for the future.

Among young adults ages 18 to 34, only a third rated their financial situation as "excellent" or "good," compared with 54 percent for seniors age 65 and over. In 2004, before the recession began, about half of both young and older adults rated their own financial situations highly.

"Young workers are on the bottom of the ladder, and during a recession like we've had, it's often hard for them to hold on," said Kim Parker, associate director of Pew's Social & Demographic Trends project. She noted that despite the challenges, only 9 percent said they didn't think they would ever have enough money to live the life they want. HOPE YEN (AP)

Regime crackdown in Homs aims to still the uprising's heart

Mafrag, Jordan

Every day, rockets and mortars fired by regime forces rattle Homs. Rebels ambush military checkpoints. Hatreds brew on either side of the avenues that divide the bloodstained Syrian city.

Homs has become the focus of the worst violence of the 11-month-old uprising, which appears to be morphing into a civil war with fearsome sectarian overtones. Syria's third-largest city has become the major center of both resistance and reprisal, fueled in part by increasingly bold army defectors who want to bring down President Bashar Assad's autocratic regime by force.

Early in the uprising, residents tried to recreate the fervor of Egypt's Tahrir Square, only to face siege upon siege by government forces for nearly a year. Homs now is a powerful symbol of the revolution.

outside government control, the regime's tanks and snipers are again opening fire in an offensive that began early Saturday to root out pockets of resistance and retake control of the area.

"You'll be shot dead, if you go out," Samar Rahim, 32, said in this Jordanian town along the Syrian border, one week after she fled Homs with her family. "Snipers are firing at anyone in the streets. That's why we left everything behind."

Rahim and other refugees interviewed by the AP described living in fear, hunkering down inside their homes and desperately trying to protect their children.

The city of about 1 million shelters a large number of military defectors known as the Free Syrian Army, and many parts of Homs are outside of government control.

If rebel forces keep gaining ground in Homs, some believe they could ultimately carve out a zone akin to Libya's Benghazi, where rebels launched their uprising.

Amateur video posted online by activists Wednesday showed empty streets with black smoke billowing from residential areas, with the sounds of explosions and crackle of gunfire in the background. Women and children are seen running for safety. Hundreds are believed to have been killed there in the past five days.

The U.N. estimates that 5,400 people have been killed in Syria since the uprising began in March. But that figure is from January, when the U.N. stopped counting because the chaos in Syria has made it all but impossible to check the figures. BASSEM MROUE (AP)

Our Last Frontier Tapped

Researchers bore into the largest lake below Antarctica

Moscow

After more than two decades of drilling in Antarctica, Russian scientists have reached a gigantic lake hidden under miles of ice for some 20 million years — a pristine body of water that may hold life from the distant past and clues to the search for life on other planets.

Touching the surface of Lake Vostok, the largest of nearly 400 subglacial lakes in Antarctica, is a major discovery avidly anticipated by scientists around the world.

Valery Lukin, the head of Russia's Arctic and Antarctic Research Institute, announced the mission's success Wednesday.

The Russian team hit the lake Sunday at the depth of 12,366 feet. The challenges of drilling through the ice crust made the project unique: Temperatures on the Vostok Station on the surface have registered the coldest ever lake despite its high pressure and constant cold — conditions similar to those expected to be found under the ice crust on Mars or Jupiter's moon Europa. (AP)

Deep Significance

Researchers hope that studies of Lake Vostok and other subglacial lakes will advance knowledge of Earth's own climate and help predict its changes. The lake may allow a glimpse into microbial life forms that existed before the Ice Age. Scientists believe that microbial life may exist in the dark depths of the

The effort has drawn fears that the lubricants and antifreeze used in the drilling may contaminate the lake.

University of Colorado geological sciences professor James White was among those who urged caution about drilling into subglacial lakes.

"Lake Vostok is the crown jewel of lakes there," White said. "These are the last frontiers on the planet we are exploring — we really ought to be very careful."

Russian scientists expect to remove frozen samples for analysis in December, when the next Antarctic summer season comes. (AP)

Greek Coalition Weighs Deal on Austerity Plan

Athens, Greece

After three days of delays, Greek coalition leaders held crucial debt talks Wednesday with the prime minister to review a draft deal on steep cutbacks demanded by creditors in return for a $170 billion bailout.

The American Public Transportation Association said the potential transportation bill would increase transit costs nationwide.

Transit Bill Criticized

Transportation group claims plan to cut
funds is short-sighted

Washington

Members of the American Public Transportation Association gathered on a conference call Wednesday to discuss a move by Congress to possibly cut $25 billion in dedicated gas tax revenues from mass transit.

The House Ways and Means Committee voted last week to divert money from the dedicated fuel tax revenues to transit systems. Members of APTA called the move a “short-sighted proposal.”

In a press release, APTA said the change would “erode credit ratings” and increase the cost for transit systems and local governments. About 20 percent of the revenue that goes to the Highway Trust Fund comes from federal gas taxes and funds mass transit. That money could be redirected to pay for roads and bridges. It would leave mass transit to get funding from the general fund and later from an annual appropriation.

About 20 percent

Metro received $228 million last year from the formula funded by gas tax revenue.

Federal Transit Administrator Peter M. Rogoff called the House Republicans’ plan “a huge step backward from a balanced transportation policy” in a statement.

He noted that the bill “takes away billions of dollars that have already been collected solely for mass transit, impacting every American that rides a bus, or a train, or uses a paratransit van to get to work, school, or medical appointments each day.”

Rogoff raised concerns that “all future federal transit funding” would be subject to “partisan, controversial and unworkable funding schemes.”

Among those participating in Wednesday’s call were Michael Melaniphy of the APTA, Gary Thomas of the Dallas Area Rapid Transit, Janet Kavinoky of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, William Ankner, former secretary of Transportation and Development in Louisiana, and Patrick Scully, chief commercial officer for Daimler Buses.

Officials: Bus Drivers Top Offenders in Scam

D.C. officials say school bus drivers are among the top 10 offenders in a scheme to collect unemployment benefits while employed by the District government. Nearly 90 employees were suspended on Monday, and another 40 employees were implicated in the scheme. City officials estimate that working employees have received $800,000 in benefits since 2009. Bill to Expand Va. Death Penalty Dies in Senate

A bill to expand the death penalty in Virginia has died on a tie vote in a Senate committee. Sen. The legislation would have allowed the death penalty for accomplices who share the intent to kill. (AP)

Prosecutor: Love Was Threatened

State says Huguely sent menacing email to ex-beau in 2010

Charlottesville, Va.

Prosecutors on Wednesday said that a few days before Yeardeley Love's death, George Huguely V sent her an email that said in part: "I should have killed you."

Commonwealth's Attorney Warner Chapman told jurors at Huguely's trial that the April 30 message was among several in an angry series of emails between the on-again-off-again couple, both University of Virginia students, in the spring of 2010.

Prosecutors said Huguely, of Chevy Chase, broke down Love's bedroom door, shook her until her head banged against a wall and left her bleeding. Early May 3, her roommate found Love, 22, dead, facedown on her bed.

Francis McQ. Lawrence, one of Huguely's defense attorneys, said Huguely never intended to hurt Love and went to her apartment "to talk, to make up, to work things out." He said Love's head never struck the wall, and that the couple, while on the bed together, fell to the floor.

Lawrence said Huguely, who was drunk that night, left Love's apartment with no sense she had been badly hurt. As Huguely walked out, Lawrence said, he grabbed Love's computer "to get her to reach out" to him in the morning.

"Everything that happened here was unintended and unexpected," Lawrence said and left "no reason for George to think" Love was dead or seriously injured.

Huguely on Monday pleaded not guilty to counts of first-degree murder, felony murder in a robbery or attempted robbery, robbery of a residence, burglary, entering a house with intent to commit a felony and grand larceny.

Region's Authorities to Hold 'Rat Summit'

Officials to address rodent problem in Md., Va., District

Washington

The infamous D.C. rat population appears to have gained some newfound political clout. Not only did rats prompt, in part, the weekend raid on the Occupy D.C. camps, but the rodents now will be getting their own summit.

Rats most recently made the news when city officials expressed concern about unsanitary conditions at the Occupy D.C. camps at McPherson Square and Freedom Plaza.

Now, Virginia Attorney General Ken Cuccinelli II, a Republican, says his office will help coordinate a meeting of regional governments to address the rat problem in what has been dubbed a "rat summit."

At the summit — the date and place have not yet been set — Cuccinelli also plans to discuss his criticism of D.C.'s animal control law.

Called the Wildlife Protection Act, the measure was approved in 2010 but has not yet been fully implemented.

The controversy also has prompted Maryland Delegate Patrick McDonough, a Republican, to announce plans for an "anti-rat trafficking" bill that would make it illegal to transport vermin from the District into Maryland.

Troubled Line

A number of issues could be at play when it comes to Metro's rail cracks, including weather, age and how the track wears, said Rob Troup, assistant general manager of Metro's rail infrastructure and engineering.

"Everything on the Red Line is older," he said, which makes it predisposed to possibly having more cracks because the track is worn and tunnels can have water leaks that lead to cracks. That's why, he said, "We are aggressively pursuing rail replacement on that line." (TWP)

Metro Targets Rails

Transit experts say operations and upkeep contribute to a rise in cracks

Washington

The way Metro maintains its tracks and operates trains could be contributing to an uptick in cracked rails in recent years, according to transit experts.

The transit authority is still trying to determine why it's seeing an increase. There were 49 reports last year, up from 33 in 2010 and 19 in 2009.

Experts say causes may include Metro's use of a mix of rail cars made by different manufacturers and the fact that workers operate trains manually, a practice begun for safety reasons after the 2009 Red Line crash.

"That wears at the rail," said Matt Bassett, chair of the Tri-State Oversight Committee, which monitors safety at Metro.

Another factor, experts say, is that Metro is running more trains with more cars than it did in its early days. The additional weight puts more strain on the rails.

The age of the system, parts of which began operation in 1976, water leaks and poor maintenance could also be contributing to the problem.

The transit authority has said it could be years before trains return to automatic control, a system that failed in the Red Line accident.

Metro chief spokesman Dan Stessel said there is unlikely to be one conclusive cause.

"You can never say, 'Aha. That's it,'" he said. "It is probably a combo of things."

In January, Metro had six cracked rails, the same as in January 2010. Riders felt the pain of extensive delays when five such incidents occurred during rush hour.

Two of the incidents occurred when temperatures dipped from warm to very cold, causing rails to contract and pulling pieces apart, a normal occurrence, experts said.

But what's unique in the recent cracks, they said, is that four of the incidents occurred in tunnels, where rails don't crack as often because they are protected from the weather.

The cracks have led the National Transportation Safety Board to ask for additional information on Metro's findings to "determine if further action is required," said Keith Holloway, an NTSB spokesman.

Rob Troup, assistant general manager of Metro's rail infrastructure and engineering, said Metro is still "looking for the commonality" of the recent rail cracks.

Troup said Metro has determined the fractured rail is "not from the same batch," which "tells us we don't have any manufacturing defects."

Martin Schroeder, chief engineer for the American Public Transportation Association, said Metro's six incidents in January aren't too surprising "given the age, complexity and wear of the system."

"They're doing their utmost to find cracks and getting them fixed," Schroeder said. "It may look to riders like they're not doing well, but given the fact they're doing more preventable measures is some progress." DANA HEDGPETH

(THE WASHINGTON POST)

Monitoring the Rails

Metro officials said they are taking effective measures to detect cracks. Of the 49 cracked rails found last year, 71 percent were identified in the inspection process — either by track walkers or specialized equipment, according to Dan Stessel, Metro's chief spokesman. In the past year, Metro has replaced 24,300 fasteners, 36 switches and nearly 15 miles of rail in the 106-mile system as part of its massive capital budget to fix the aging and deteriorating system. Metro is also conducting metallurgical reports to "get better insight," Stessel said. The agency has bought a $14 million track geometry vehicle that will do ultrasonic and laser testing of the rail an average of five nights a week. It is expected to be delivered later this spring. That price tag includes training and maintenance. (TWP)

'We've Just Got To Keep Winning'

After their stellar effort on Tuesday, the Capitals face another key test

The Capitals

The elite Capitals who dominate teams, score highlight-reel goals and create one of the NHL's best arena atmospheres have returned — well, at least for one night.

Against the Florida Panthers on Tuesday, the Capitals turned in their strongest performance of the season, a 4-0 win in which Alex Ovechkin scored twice and goalie Tomas Vokoun turned away all 42 shots the Panthers took.

7 P.M.
Thursday | CSN

"We just had our focus on getting the win," said forward Brooks Laich, who played despite a lower-body injury. "[Florida is] a good team, and by no means does this mean that [our] division is wrapped up. We are not arrogant in that sense. ... We've just got to keep winning."

The win moved the Capitals into first place in the Southeast Division — bumping the Panthers from that spot — and Thursday night's game against the Winnipeg Jets can extend Washington's division lead if they win or reach overtime.

But, as fans have learned, it's easier said than done. Washington has been an on-and-off team this season. One night, superstars such as Ovechkin can light the lamp; the next, the team's offense runs dry.

Coach Dale Hunter said a key in rectifying the imbalance is creating pressure from the Alex Ovechkin scored twice in the Capitals' 4-0 win against the Florida Panthers on Tuesday night. Next, they'll play the Winnipeg Jets on Thursday.

A Day of Rest

The Capitals held a 40-minute practice Wednesday, but given the rigors of the schedule at this point in the season, a few players were instructed to take the day off from skating. All-Stars Alex Ovechkin and Dennis Wideman, and Brooks Laich — who played Tuesday after injuring his knee last Sunday — were excused from the session. According to coach Dale Hunter, Laich "was good" after playing 9 minutes, 28 seconds against the Panthers but could use the rest. (TWP) start of the game.

Against the Panthers, the Caps scored just 13 seconds into the game with a shot from Mathieu Perreault. Ovechkin followed with a tally nine minutes later to give Washington a 2-0 lead after the first period.

"We jumped on them early. It changed the game a bit when we got two quick goals," Hunter said. "[Florida] had to play a different game, and it ended up at our advantage."

Creating a similar urgency from the start might prove difficult against the Jets, who are coming off a 2-1 victory over the Toronto Maple Leafs on Tuesday night and are fighting to stay alive in the Eastern Conference playoff picture.

With the Capitals and Panthers likely to go back and forth for the Southeast Division lead, the Jets will need every point they can get. Winnipeg trails Washington and Florida by four and three points, respectively, and while winning a division title isn't impossible, it's not expected.

Thursday night's game is equally important for the Capitals. For the first time in four seasons, the team is facing the possibility of missing the playoffs.

"We don't want to kind of be [a] bubble team and just sit there," Vokoun said. "We, definitely want to win our division, and that is what we set our goal as. It's not going to be easy." REED S. ALBERS

AU's Hinkle Scores Big

Transfer blossoms into top threat during his senior season

AU Hoops

The American University men's basketball team was in a tight spot last weekend, losing at Colgate by a point in the final minute. Had this scenario played out a year ago, Charles Hinkle would've been, at best, the fourth choice to win the game.

But Vlad Moldoveanu had graduated, Stephen Lumpkins had chosen a baseball contract over his senior season of basketball, and top returning player Troy Brewer was still not in the flow after returning from foot and ankle injuries.

As they've done throughout this season, the Eagles turned to Hinkle, who has blossomed into one of the nation's finest scorers. Coach Jeff Jones charted a play for the

High Scorer

Entering Wednesday night, American's Charles Hinkle ranked 18th nationally in scoring among more than 4,000 Division I players. He is 30th in 3-point percentage at 42.2; leads the Patriot League in 3-pointers made (62) and minutes per game (34.5); and is fourth in free throw accuracy at 83.1 percent. He averaged just 4.5 points last season, his first in D.C. (TWP)

6-foot-5 senior forward. "It didn't work the way we wanted," Hinkle said, who joined AU last season after transferring from Vanderbilt. "But I found my spot."

Hinkle was spot-on with 33 seconds left, hitting his fourth 3-pointer of the half to lift the Eagles (15-8, 6-2) to their fifth victory in six games and remain tied with Lehigh (18-6, 6-2) for second in the Patriot League behind preseason favorite Bucknell (18-6, 8-0).

AU and Lehigh will collide Thursday night at Bender Arena, featuring the conference's leading scorers: Mountain Hawks junior guard C.J. McCollum (21.3 points per game) and Hinkle (19.7).

Hinkle has led the way, scoring at least 20 points 13 times, making at least four 3-pointers nine times, and scoring 32 points against Saint Joseph's and 31 against Quinnipiac. He also shares the team rebounding lead with 5.5 per game.

"He has been tremendous," said Brewer, who is averaging 12.2 points after battling his injuries.

Terps Football

Danny O'Brien, who earned ACC rookie of the year honors after a breakout 2010 season, is seriously considering whether to leave Maryland's football program and transfer to another school, individuals with knowledge of the situation said Wednesday.

The departure of O'Brien, who has two years of eligibility remaining, would represent a significant blow to coach Randy Edsall's program. If O'Brien departs, the Terapins would have just one other experienced quarterback on the roster next season in junior-to-be C.J. Brown. On his Twitter account,

O'Brien wrote, "Contrary to rumor, I am still a Terp."

According to one individual with knowledge of the situation, O'Brien will spend the weekend deciding with his family whether to leave Maryland. If he departs, O'Brien would be the 11th player with eligibility remaining to leave the program for various reasons since Edsall's first season — a disastrous 2-10 campaign — ended in November. Redskins Explore Camp Options

George Mason ruled out as team ponders Ashburn alternative

The Redskins

The Redskins continue to explore options that would enable them to hold training camp away from Redskins Park for the first time since 2002. But if they do, it won't take place at George Mason University.

GMU Athletic Director Tom O'Connor said that Redskins General Manager Bruce Allen and members of his staff met with O'Connor shortly after the first of the year to discuss the possibility of holding camp at the university's Fairfax campus. But a mutual determination was made, according to O'Connor, that George Mason wouldn't be able to host Washington's training camp.

"After careful consideration," O'Connor said, "we agreed that although the Redskins believe that Mason's athletic facilities are top-notch, and we had all the things they would need from a football standpoint, we wouldn't be able to meet the requirements to accommodate the media and fans at this time."

The Redskins looked into holding camp at George Mason last off-season, but the uncertainty of the NFL lockout hindered the team's ability ty to plan for specific dates, and the talks with O'Connor and the university didn't progress very far. The two sides agreed to resume talks at a later time, and did so last month.

When reached for comment on the Redskins' plans for this year's training camp, team spokesman Tony Wyllie said only, "We're exploring all of our options."

In the last two days, officials from Dickinson College in Carlisle, Pa., (where the Redskins held training camp from 1963 to 1994, and 2001 and 2002) and Frostburg State University (where Washington had camp from 1995 to 1999) said that they had not had any recent contact with the Redskins. Neither had officials at William & Mary, which the team has previously explored using for its camp, or Catholic University in the District. (THE WASHINGTON POST)

Beyond the Portrait

Famed photographer Annie Leibovitz turns her lens toward new places and spaces

Exhibits

Annie Leibovitz hadn't planned to visit Louisa May Alcott's Orchard House last summer. But she was in Concord, Mass., to see Walden Pond, and as she puts it, she kept "tripping over it again and again and again."

Once inside, "I was captivated," Leibovitz says. She began photographing the home where Alcott wrote and set "Little Women," as well as the items in it. She was particularly drawn to three dolls owned by the Alcotts. She wanted to shoot the toys displayed on a miniature couch purchased by Alcott's father, but it was covered in plain cotton, not the handsome dark horsehair it had originally sported.

"We went all over the house, trying to set up those dolls in different ways," says Jan Turnquist, Orchard House's executive director. "We tried everything, and nothing really suited [Leibovitz]. She felt those dolls had a real personality, and she wanted them to be together, and they looked so perfect on the sofa, except for its fabric."

So, Leibovitz (who joined the museum's board of directors after that visit) offered to pay for the sofa to be restored to its original appearance, and she returned a few months later to capture her ideal image. The photo is now part of Leibovitz's new show, "Pilgrimage," which runs through May 20 at the Smithsonian American Art Museum. The 64 photos on view are drawn from her book of the same name, published last year.

Object Lessons

Aside from the Orchard House dolls, all of the subjects in "Pilgrimage" — a wide-ranging collection of objects, landmarks and landscapes from across the U.S. and England — were photographed just as Leibovitz encountered them. Most shots have a clear connection to well-known individuals of the past (opera singer Marian Anderson's concert gown, Abraham Lincoln's top hat, Ansel Adams' photo studio) or showcase locations that have a sense of character all their own (Niagara Falls, Monticello, Graceland). There's life in all of the images, but no living beings in any.

NATURAL WONDER: Annie Leibovitz shot this image of Niagara Falls, taken in Ontario, Canada, "in the middle of a very difficult time in my life," she says. She was millions of dollars in debt and facing the possibility of losing control of her life's work. On a trip to the falls with her kids, she was "sitting off to the side, feeling a little down" when she noticed her kids were completely "in awe" of the natural spectacle in front of them. She joined them on the walkway overlooking the falls and took this photo. "It's an American snapshot," she says.

Photographing inanimate objects would seem like a relief for Leibovitz, who has had to manage the egos and attitudes of famous subjects over a four-decade career of shooting portraits for outlets such as Rolling Stone and Vanity Fair. But she says the transition was surprisingly difficult.

"I don't want to say I thought it would be easier," she says, "but I

COLORFUL HISTORY: At the Georgia O'Keeffe Museum in Santa Fe, N.M., Annie Leibovitz photographed a box of the artist's pastels. "Here's her palette, the colors that are in her landscapes," Leibovitz explains. "To me, it's just very powerful." Traveling to the places where O'Keeffe lived and worked changed how Leibovitz understood the painter. "You think you know who somebody is, but you find out so much more when you start to do your homework, when you start to really look at their life. It's a beautiful journey."

Spotlight: Annie Leibovitz

BORN ON Oct. 2, 1949, as Anna-Lou Leibovitz, she began pursuing photography while in college at the San Francisco Art Institute. She began work at Rolling Stone in 1970.

ON DEC. 8, 1980, Leibovitz snapped the now-famous Rolling Stone cover photo of an entwined John Lennon and Yoko Ono, just hours before Lennon's murder.

IN 1991, after having left Rolling Stone for Vanity Fair, Leibovitz produced another widely recognizable cover image: a very pregnant Demi Moore.

IN 1999, Leibovitz published a collection of photos titled "Women," which was accompanied by an essay by her partner, novelist Susan Sontag, above right. Sontag died in late 2004.

IN 2009, lender Art Capital Group sued Leibovitz over millions in unpaid bills. Leibovitz narrowly avoided bankruptcy and says she regained control of her finances. K.A.

thought I’d see something and be moved. And I saw something and I was moved, but I couldn’t always control where it was. I couldn’t always photograph something the way I wanted. I had to come to terms ... with starting to photograph objects. It was a learning process.”

Legend Turned Tourist

Leibovitz says that the “Pilgrimage” project was, in part, a history lesson. She started her documenting journey in 2009 with a list of more than a dozen places that resonated with her, and those destinations led to others. (Twenty-seven are included in her book.)

“You don’t do something like this without thinking of it in an educational way,” she says. She purposely hung the pieces in the show low for young visitors, and she dedicated her book to her 10-year-old daughter and 6-year-old twin girls. Her children were the ones who inspired her to take a shot of Niagara Falls. “Your children show you the way,” she says.

For the most part, Leibovitz was shooting her pictures like anybody else who visits a museum or historic setting: as a visitor not permitted to touch her surroundings. The restrictions had an oddly equalizing effect on her process — and the resulting photos: Leibovitz’s shot of an atmospheric room containing Sigmund Freud’s blanket-covered couch at the Freud Museum in London “is pretty close to the postcard that you can buy in the gift shop,” she admits. She says her shot of Niagara Falls is “a photo anyone can take.”

But guest curator Andy Grundberg won’t minimize any of the pieces in “Pilgrimage,” emphasizing the collection’s significance in the wider canon of contemporary art. “I don’t think any other contemporary artist, photographer or not, has really gone back and seen an examination of American icons from the past the way that Annie has here,” Grundberg says. “There’s a sense of her looking back and visually trying to express something about the way the culture we have now was formed.”

There is indeed something larger at work in “Pilgrimage.” “It was definitely a search,” Leibovitz says. “When you take away the captions and you look at just the pictures by themselves ... you can see there’s some searching going on. It’s all the things we search for: a reason to be alive, to go on, to do things. There’s a whole list there.”

Wanda Sykes

COMEDIAN, ACTRESS, MOM

When Wanda Sykes walked onto a D.C. stage in 1987 to do stand-up for the first time, she had never even set foot in a comedy club. Sykes, then 27, had just quit her day job at the NSA to roll the dice on performing. It paid off: Sykes, now 47, has won fans for her roles on "Curb Your Enthusiasm," "The New Adventures of Old Christine" and the "Ice Age" movies. The outspoken comedian, who was raised in this area, returns Friday with a show at the Strathmore.

What made you quit your NSA job?

Something in me said, "This is not my life; I'm not doing this [expletive] for 40 years." I didn't even look in the classifieds, because I knew whatever I was supposed to be doing was not going to be advertised.

You have toddler twins. Has being a mom changed your material?

My friends make me feel dumb now. They're talking about Syria and Egypt, and I'm just, like, "Oscar was out of control on 'Sesame Street'. He was extra-grouchy today."

You're co-starring in a movie called "The Hot Flashes," where you have to play basketball. Do you practice?

I know you think with black people it just comes with you. ... After the first practice, my eyelids hurt.

Last year you announced you had breast cancer. How are you now?

I'm good. I was fortunate to find it early. I don't do a "Here's my big cancer hunk" [act]. I'm just trying to get the message out.

FOLGER THEATRE

The gambling women in Folger Theatre's "The Gaming Table" are experts at card games and at manipulation.

Four women stack the odds in their favor in Folger's 'Gaming Table'

Stage

Anyone who has ever whirled away a couple of twenties at a Vegas slot machine or gotten mildly addicted to online blackjack knows the chancy appeal of gambling. Eighteenth-century English playwright Susanna Centlivre clearly did, too, since she populated her 1705 work "The Basset Table" with a pack of card-game-addicted courtiers. "Centlivre used gambling as a meta-

"The Gaming Table" is an update of 18th-century British playwright Susanna Centlivre's comedy "The Basset Table." The play, modernized by contemporary playwright David Grimm, follows four strong women as they lose at cards and gamble on love.

phor for the risks inherent in romantic relationships and court society," says actress Emily Trask, who plays Valeria, one of four women who find themselves wheeling and dealing for their love lives in a country house-cum-casino in Folger Theatre's modernized version of the play "The Gaming Table."

The other richly drawn female characters — the gaming table's instigator, Lady Reveller; pious Lady Lucy; and striving, middle-class gambling addict Mrs. Sago — find themselves as spun around by their hearts as by their luck at cards. "It's great to see such vital, living, breathing women," says director Eleanor Holdridge. "I think people find it surprising that, in that era, they weren't just meek little wives or dashing seductresses."

Centlivre's witty dialogue (including naughty double entendres) propels the somewhat predictable plot, which includes cheating on husbands, cheating at cards and a good deal of tricking people into marriage.

"I think people find it surprising that, in that era, they weren't just meek little wives or dashing seductresses."

— DIRECTOR ELEANOR HOLDRIDGE

"There's really a sense that it's all a game," says set designer Marion Williams, who amped up the show's topsyturvy plot with M.C. Escher-esque upside-down staircases and a mammoth queen of hearts banner. Physical comedy, particularly enacted by the hapless Mr. Sago (Darius Pierce, who at one point hysterically slams into several walls), ups the laugh track. "There are such extremes in the plot — one character is so in love with Lady Reveller that he throws himself on the ground — that it really makes the comedy happen," Holdridge says. "I had no idea that this play was so physical, but as we worked with the actors, it just seemed to make sense."

This frolic is headed for a happy ending, but it's not without an unrepentant twist. "It ends up being a sort of dance — will these women stop gambling and reform?" Holdridge says. "You just don't buy that they will totally change their ways." And since their foibles bring so many laughs, who would want them to anyhow? JENNIFER BARGER (EXPRESS)

Through 05.20 → Sister Act: "The Gaming Table" runs in conjunction with a broader Folger show on female writers active from 1500 to 1700, "Shakespeare's Sisters," on view through May 20. These women weren't just writing the romcoms of their time, says exhibit curator Georgianna Ziegler. "They're writing on a whole variety of things. There's pastoral dramas, one woman wrote a commedia dell'arte play. By the time you get to the women playwrights in England, the earlier ones are doing religious pieces, but the later writers are all writing secular plays." KRISTEN PAGE-KIRBY (EXPRESS)

Soundtrack to a Life

Singer and songwriter Sharon Van Etten makes progress on her third disc, the amped-up 'Tramp'

Music

Sharon Van Etten spent her first two albums getting over a guy.

Her college boyfriend, who played in a touring emo band, felt Van Etten was wasting time making her sparse, country-infused folk. When he wasn't paying attention, Van Etten wrote songs about him, essentially turning their tumultuous relationship into her 2009 debut, "Because I Was in Love."

By the time the album came out, Van Etten had already left the boyfriend and Tennessee, where she went to school, and moved to New York to pursue a career in music. She interned at a record label there, Ba Da Bing, which put out her follow-up disc, "Epic," in 2010.

With her third album, "Tramp," out this week on Jagjaguwar, Van Etten is finally shaking off that relationship.

"This one is looking back but moving on," Van Etten says. "Even when it's darker and even when it sounds angry, it's really me trying to find peace. ... It's [my] first record that's not all about that bad egg."

It's also her most expansive album. Beyond similar lyrical threads, the first two records share a stark, twangy acoustic sound. For "Tramp," she linked up with Aaron Dessner of indie sensations the National, who produced the record and encouraged Van Etten to step outside her comfort zone.

"He's very encouraging of the drone," says Van Etten, who experimented heavily with electric guitar and effects pedals on "Tramp." The result bears a hint of the National's trademark guitar sound, with Van Etten's sultry-but-sweet voice layered over deeper textures.

You wouldn't know from listening to "Tramp," but Van Etten is in a relationship now, and things are going well. Maybe the next record will have more uplifting songs.

"That's what my mom keeps saying," Van Etten says. "For the love of God, Sharon, give me something happy!" RUDI GREENBERG (EXPRESS)

She took her mic, went into the room, and she sat on the floor and did a few takes of these really, really beautiful, kind of painful groans and moans. It really adds a lot of tension to the song. For me, intuitively, that's not something I would do."

"KEVIN'S": "'Kevin's' was a [basement apartment] I was subletting in December 2010. I was really productive in that time. It was after months and months of traveling and crashing at friends' houses to the point where I was, like, 'I need my own space.' I ended up writing four songs then, so I called them 'Kevin's 1,' 'Kevin's 2,' 'Kevin's 3,' 'Kevin's 4.' So when I go back and reference them later, I can remember where I wrote it."

Get Zef With Die Antwoord

Few current hip-hop acts are as outrageous as Die Antwoord, a crew from Cape Town, South Africa, that just released its second album, "TEN$ION" (Downtown). Rapper Ninja and singer Yo-Landi Vi$Ser mix late-'80s rap with rave-inspired beats to create a style dubbed "zef," Afrikaans slang for anything grubby yet stylish. Eye-popping videos for singles "Enter the Ninja" and "I Fink U Freeky" have made Die Antwoord a blog sensation, but on the eve of its first big U.S. tour, it remains largely unknown here. With that in mind, here's a primer on the strange world of Die Antwoord — Afrikaans for "the Answer."

Shakespeare Theatre turns 'Two Gentlemen of Verona' into a fast, contemporary drama

Stage

Gritty modern productions of "Romeo and Juliet" are commonplace. Wild emotions, violence, societal repression — how did anyone ever stage this as a stilted classical piece? The same thought might occur to audiences of Shakespeare Theatre's "Two Gentlemen of Verona." One of the bard's early comedies, it's generally performed as an over-the-top farce — self-serious in affect, but not taking the characters' motivations and actions seriously.

Director PJ Paparelli reimagine "Verona" as a fearless musical fantasy. "I don't think Shakespeare was trying to write a pure comedy," he says. "The stakes of the play are very real. We just took them at face value."

It's impossible to delve into the plot without spoilers, but here's the gist: Valentine (Andrew Veenstra) and Proteus (Nick Dillenburg) are best friends in Verona. When Valentine departs for Milan, Proteus follows, leaving behind his girlfriend Julia (Miriam Silverman).

In Milan, Valentine and Proteus both fall for Silvia (Natalie Mitchell). Add hormones, guns and a funny bit with a dog.

Paparelli's interpretation of the play seems to owe a lot to the films of director Baz Luhrmann, including "Romeo + Juliet." Paparelli juxtaposes hyper-realistic fight scenes with the surreal glamour of contemporary Italian nightclubs and plasters corporate logos all over the set to keep the play grounded in modern culture. Snarky supertitles keep the scene changes from becoming confusing.

"Verona" requires young actors who can maneuver barely believable emotional hairpin turns as the characters switch allegiances and forgive the unforgivable. Paparelli's version also adds that all-important teen mood enhancer, music — in forms as varied as karaoke and late-night lonely piano bar crooning.

"Music is such a big part of a teenager's life," Paparelli says. "It was important to me that there be music throughout the play to create an emotional landscape. I was looking for as many opportunities as possible to have music tell the story." FIONA ZUBLIN (EXPRESS)

The National Museum of Language deserves an A-plus for effort

"Is this it?" asked a confused visitor to the National Museum of Language. The name implies a more magisterial setting than this low-ceilinged plot of green institutional carpet in a College Park, Md., office building. The answer, "There are a few displays across the hall," seemed disappointing, and the man wandered away.

Do not judge the NML. It's doing the best it can with what it has: a few rooms, not much funding, and knowledgeable, attentive docents for whom the museum is a labor of love.

Backstory: The NML opened in 2008, after 10 years of planning.

It spreads the good news about language and language-learning.

Main Room: The

Back Room: The NML has every right to capitalize on the cachet of "national," as evidenced by the exhibit "Emerging American Language in 1812." Changes in spellings and vocabulary helped Americans differentiate themselves from their former British overlords. Dictionary czar Noah Webster was a key player, adding Native American words such as "succotash" to the lexicon and pushing spelling reforms such as "color" for "colour" and "wimmen" for "women." That one failed, as did "spunge" for "sponge."

Ex-Big Tobacco worker Victor DeNoble — the main focus of "Addiction Incorporated" — talks to kids about the dangers of smoking.

Big Smoke Screen

The new doc 'Addiction Incorporated' charts the deceit and decline of the tobacco industry

Screen

"Addiction Incorporated" is more than a PSA about how cigarettes are bad for you. The documentary, now playing at the E Street Cinema, also has an element of "All the President's Men," with journalists struggling to tell a story that those in power don't want told.

The story here is about the addictiveness of cigarettes — a story multiple news outlets uncovered in the mid-'90s but chose not to report, despite the information given them by whistle-blowers. "Think about it," says director Charles Evans Jr. "A man has delivered documents on par with the Pentagon Papers, only it's an ongoing crime, and [a reporter] is told he can't report on it."

The documentary's focus is Victor DeNoble, a scientist who starts working with Phillip Morris in the 1980s to make a cigarette that, as he puts it, "was equally addictive but killed less people." DeNoble was successful, manipulating other chemicals to lower the amount of nicotine while keeping cigarettes crave-worthy. But as he prepared to present a paper on his findings at a scientific conference, Phillip Morris suddenly pulled him from the event and shut down his lab — after all, if their in-house lab had proved that not only are cigarettes addictive but that their addictive quality is kind of the point, they couldn't pretend that they weren't in the addiction business.

"It's not a 'pound the tobacco industry' story. In the end, it's an educational message."

— CHARLES EVANS JR., DIRECTOR OF "ADDICTION INCORPORATED"

While many would like to believe that everyone who works for Big Tobacco is a mustache-twirling villain, DeNoble is no bad guy. "This was a man who wanted to do good with science," Evans says. "That's the story I wanted to tell, along with the story of the cigarette industry and their behavior and all of the drama of their disgrace and decline."

DeNoble — who now spends his time educating kids about the dangers of cigarettes, with funding provided, ironically, by the tobacco companies as part of a government settlement — is the moral center of "Addiction Incorporated." "It's not a 'pound the tobacco industry' story. In the end, it's an educational message, a 'Can you find the Victor in yourself?' message."

3-D to the Rescue?

Remember that feeling you had as you left the theater after seeing "THE PHANTOM MENACE"? Starting Friday, you can experience it again — in 3-D! But why stop there? There are plenty of disappointing films we'd like to see come right at us. K.P.K.

1 Indiana Jones and the Kingdom of the Crystal Skull (2008)

Having Indy return in this mess of a film (Aliens? Really?) was a bummer, but it would be neat to see his whip crack above audience members' heads.

2 Signs (2002)

This story of aliens who couldn't figure out doorknobs was the first clue that M. Night Shyamalan was kind of making things up as he went along. But that water-glass-smashing scene would be cool in 3-D.

3 X-Men Origins: Wolverine (2009)

An abysmal script made even the most hard-core of comics fans turn their backs on this. But you DID get to see Hugh Jackman with his shirt off, and 3-D could only make that better.

4 The Godfather: Part III (1990)

This follow-up to two of the most perfect movies ever made fell flat. Actually, we're not sure it really needs 3-D, since Al Pacino's overacting practically jumps off the screen anyway.

5 The Matrix Reloaded (2003) and The Matrix Revolutions (2003)

The less said about these, the better. But 3-D fight scenes couldn't hurt.

James Armstrong, who was active in the civil rights movement, is the subject of the film "The Barber of Birmingham."

Short-Attention-Span Theater

One of the highlights of the moviegoing year is the Oscar Nominated Shorts Festival. You get to see five movies, and if one is boring, it doesn't matter, because it'll be over soon! We used to get only the Animated and Live Action selections, but starting Friday we can see the Documentary Shorts. They include four films: "The Tsunami and the Cherry Blossom" (directed by Lucy Walker, who helmed the excellent "Waste Land"), "Incident in New Baghdad," "Saving Face" and "The Barber of Birmingham." The first three are not for the faint of heart or spirit. They cover, respectively, the Japan tsunami; the killing of two Reuters journalists and a number of unarmed civilians by the U.S. in Iraq in 2007; and a plastic surgeon in Pakistan who tries to help victims of acid attacks. The fourth is more uplifting, as it focuses on James Armstrong, an Alabama barber who was active in the civil rights movement, as he witnesses the election of the first African-American U.S. president. ▶ West End Cinema, 2301 M St. NW; opens Fri., see Westendcinema.com for showtimes, $8-$12; 202-419-3456. CHAD SMITH

WINTER WONDERLAND If it's winter in Baltimore, chances are Umphrey's McGee will be at Rams Head Live! The Chicago jam band (from left are bassist Ryan Stasik, guitarist Jake Cinninger and singer Brendan Bayliss) plays the venue in the first quarter of almost every year, bringing high-energy improvisations with a progressive rock tinge (this year, the show is Sunday). The group's latest album, "Death by Stereo," is less jammy than the live show, which features a different set list every night.

MATT MCCLAIN/FTWP

All You Eat Is Love

Roses are red, violets are blue, Tom Sietsema has a restaurant that's just right for you two

Valentine's Day

Romance comes in all shapes and sizes, a range of colors and price points, which is why I tailor my response to the inevitable question I get this time of year — “Where should I go for Valentine's Day?” — by posing a question of my own: What kind of diner are you?

For the food fan

If Cashion's Eat Place were a magazine, it would be Saveur, the worldly periodical that's smart without being smug and as eager to look back as to look forward with its food. Opened in 1995 and helmed by John Manolatos since 2007, the softly lighted Adams Morgan destination is a sublime example of how to mature with grace.

Goat cheese souffle and veal sweetbreads with garlicky spinach make regular appearances; a recent creamless soup of three squashes is brighter than it sounds, thanks to the kaffir lime in the bowl. Someone at the table should seize on the chef's heritage: Order the goat, a Greek mini-feast of spit-roasted meat sparked with cilantro and chilies offered with pillowy flatbread and cool tzatziki sauce.

Now and then, the kitchen reminds me it's human. It's fun to see turkey on the winter menu, but not when the braised “shank” is sapped of its juice. The accompanying broad, house-made noodles, however, are divine. Come to think of it, any of the pastas here are worth your taste buds' attention.

For the hipster

From its April opening, Taiwanese-style ramen shop Toki Underground acquired a cult following that knows to be in line by 5 p.m. or risk an uncertain outdoor wait.

Strapping bowls of steaming noodles from Taipei-born, Tokyo- and Woodbridge, Va.-raised Erik Bruner-Yang are the lure, but the Plume, at the Jefferson Hotel, is a posh setting for a traditional Valentine's Day meal.

STIRLING ELMENDORF

Get There

These places will be busy on Feb. 14, so consider going another day.

- Plume, 1200 16th St. NW; 202-448-2300, Jeffersondc.com/restaurant-dining. (Farragut North)
- Cashion's Eat Place, 1819 Columbia Road NW; 202-797-1819, Cashion-seatplace.com. (Woodley Park)
- Toki Underground, 1234 H St. NE; 202-388-3086, Tokiunderground.com.

setting registers a 10 on the fun meter, too

Skateboards stand in for guardrails, interior shingles and footrests. Japanese anime art serves as wallpaper, and red paper lanterns dangle from faux tree branches, bathing the area in a dreamy glow. For sure, no one would confuse Toki Underground, whose chef shops daily, with the clichés of P.F. Chang's.

With fewer than a dozen appetizers and bowls of ramen, the menu is an easy read. The two ramen I tend to spoon into most often are curry chicken Hakata, floating crisp nuggets of spiced chicken and pickled ginger; and the meatless masumi, packed with a garden of vegetables including squash, seaweed and mushrooms, its broth dark and intense. Keep dessert in mind: Snickerdoodles take well to chocolate and kimchi pepper flakes.

For the traditionalist

Plume, in the sumptuous Jefferson Hotel, is the rare restaurant where entrees outshine first courses. Fashion trends are bypassed in favor of tradition. Picture lobster thermidor and a proper veal chop, the meat cooked just the shade you ask and served as a fan of slices on the bone. To the side of the chop are splashes of mustard-punched jus and a precise line of marble-size poached apples alternating with crisp potato croquettes. It's all quite satisfying, especially in the company of a Spanish rioja that goes down, just as the sommelier promised, like a French Burgundy.

For sure, no one would confuse Toki Underground, whose chefs shop daily, with the clichés of P.F. Chang's.

Scored roast duck is a fine fowl draped on a bed of caramelized endive and nudged with a cinnamon-spiced huckleberry sauce (hold the dry duck confit, thanks). And the cheese cart is one of the city's more impressive. Be sure to include in any mix of five (for $18) the delightfully pungent and runny Epoisses from France.

Plume is thoughtful right to the finish, dropping off one-bite confections after dessert is cleared and ushering you into the night with a ribboned scroll detailing the wines you drank.

Even if the cooking doesn't woo you, the setting will. TOM SIETSEMA (THE WASHINGTON POST)

Tortino's grilled pork chop—one of the eatery's tastier dishes—gets a flavor boost from a marinade of olive oil, sage and thyme.

A Place of His Own

A veteran cook in area Italian kitchens, Noe Canales opens Tortino

Name an established Italian kitchen in Washington and chances are good that Noe Canales has cooked there. Since he arrived from El Salvador in 1990—at which time he promptly landed a job as a dishwasher at the late Bice, only to move up to salad-making in less than a month—Canales has worked in noted restaurants such as Café Milano in Georgetown, Al Tiramisu in Dupont Circle and the posh Tosca downtown.

The chef has a place of his own now, a modest but endearing 60-seat restaurant called Tortino, named in part, says Canales, for the ease with which it rolls off the tongue.

Opened in late November, its two low-ceilinged dining rooms and bar fill a hole in a neighborhood with relatively few places to break bread, let alone twirl pasta.

Someone in a vest and bow tie is apt to greet and seat you with a smile. “I wanted to do a little place with quality,” says the chef. That’s apparent in his three-color salad jazzed up with almonds, goat cheese and a lemony dressing, and in his fettuccine, which he makes himself and drapes with a Bolognese sauce of ground veal shot through with fresh thyme, rosemary and bay leaf.

Tortino doesn’t ace the risotto test, however (some of the grains are mush, others resist the teeth), and as enticing as swordfish with braised cabbage and grilled eggplant might read on paper, the centerpiece simply tastes ... wet. From someone who spent seven years as sous-chef at Al Tiramisu, I also expected a tiramisu with more finesse.

Try this: Order that pretty chiffonade of radicchio, arugula and endive. Follow it with a pork chop that picks up flavor from its marinade of olive oil, sage and thyme and is grilled to the shade you request. Spoon into some jiggy panna cotta, garnished with macerated fruit, for dessert.

To go in knowing Tortino’s strengths is to depart with plans to return. TOM SIETSEMA (THE WASHINGTON POST)

Dine & Dash: The International Wine and Food Festival invites you to the Ronald Reagan Building (1300 Pennsylvania Ave. NW) to kick off a booze-filled weekend of events with “Cupid’s Not Stupid, Cocktails to Fall For” on Friday. For $55, attendees will enjoy Valentine’s Day-themed cocktails from local drink masters, wine, beer and snacks from 7 to 10 p.m. Bartender and author Dan Searing will sign copies of his book, “The Punch Bowl.” See Wineandfooddc.com for more details.

Eater’s Digest

Taylor Gourmet’s
Aramingo Avenue

MARGE ELY/EXPRESS

Egg & Everything

In college, I was a serial egg-and-cheese sandwich eater. To me, a toasted English muffin filled with a fried egg and melted American cheese was the perfect hot breakfast treat, especially on a late, lazy morning.

Too bad College Me isn’t here today. She’d love the new weekends-only menu of egg-and-cheese “breakfast hoagies” at the 14th Street NW location of Taylor Gourmet. (Actually, she’d probably gain a double Freshman 15 from eating there non-stop, so maybe it’s a good thing she’s not around.)

Taylor Gourmet has basically pimped out my old standby. Every 6-inch breakfast hoagie ($6.90) comes with eggs and cheese—those are givens. The Passyunk Avenue adds roast pork and bacon (the cheese is a sharp provolone). The Lehigh tops eggs and mozzarella with breaded eggplant and marinara sauce. And the Aramingo Avenue—my favorite—has practically every salty, greasy, meaty ingredient you could want for breakfast heaped onto a soft sesame or wheat bun: crisp bacon, spicy sausage, hash browns, American cheese and “hangover cheese sauce,” a creamy mixture of Monterey Jack, cheddar, carrots, onions, celery, beer, milk and “secret seasonings.”

This vice-filled sandwich is very much for those “the more ingredients, the merrier” eaters—like me. Except there’s no way I can finish this in a single sitting, especially when it’s the first meal of the day. I’ll leave that to the college kids.

vain, underemployed version of himself. Some in the dwarfism community think the exposure is "just an updated version of the sideshow," says Gary Arnold, president of the Little People of America. Yet he gives the reality shows credit for showing that "people with dwarfism have physical differences but live lives that really aren't that much different than the average person."

As for Gervais, he brilliantly (and hilariously) captures the tendency to demean little people. In one scene, a dim secretary suggests a chimney sweeping career for cash-strapped Davis. "People will say, 'Wow, that is the cleanest chimney ever,'" she imagines. Then she'd reveal how it was done: "We had a dwarf on a pole!"

An increasing number of apps and websites offer a way to help heal the heartbreak blues

You thought you found your one true love online, but now you've been dumped by text or defriended on Facebook without a peep of explanation. Hours of bad TV in your bathrobe haven't helped. Your friends are tired of your whining. Forget a pampering makeover to help heal your broken heart this Valentine's Day. Go for a "digital break-over" instead, using a growing number of tech tools to save you from yourself or to sob on a safe shoulder in the ether.

LEANNE ITALIE (AP)

know our friends are getting tired of listening to us, or those of us who don't have a confidante at all," says Green, who posted there regularly for a few months. "It's also a reminder of how universal these feelings are."

"Many new relationships end without an actual ending, be it in person or via technology."

— AUDREY MELNIK, THE OWNER OF WOTWENTWRONG.COM, WHICH, SHE ADDS, PROVIDES "A WAY TO GIVE CLOSURE."

NeverLikedItAnyway

At NeverLikedItAnyway.com, dumpies sell off their engagement rings, wedding gowns and other gifts from exes. A recent bargain of the week featured an anonymous teacher's lynx fur jacket with a real-world price of $12,000 but a break-up asking price of $7,995.

WotWentWrong

The latest entrant is WotWentWrong, brand-new for dumpies in search of feedback after a first date failed to produce a follow-up call or budding love died on the vine without explanation.

Registered users fill out detailed questionnaires covering what information they're after (Was it my hair? The way I dressed?) and can customize a template letter to be sent through the site to an ex. The ex can respond with as much detail as he or she desires without contacting the sender directly.

"Many new relationships end without an actual ending, be it in person or via technology," says the site's owner, Audrey Melnik. "There are times when you can be left wondering why things ended if you didn't ask at the moment that you broke up. We provide a way to give closure."

The Ex-App

Alexandria's, Melissa McGlone, 46, turned to the Ex-App after a three-year relationship ended recently with an unceremonious text. After a weak moment or three of electronically stalking her dumper, she used the text, call and email blocker to hold his digits at bay until she could resist temptation on her own.

"I no longer humiliate myself by trying to contact him," she says.

The free app took off last March with 3,000 downloads in the first nine months. Unlike other blocking tools, the Ex-App also tracks the number of days spent NOT trying to ferret out a former love.

Users of WotWentWrong.com are able to get feedback on why a date failed by sending a letter to an ex, who can then respond via the site.

Dear Old Love Tumblr

In New York, 28-year-old Amanda Green relied on the well-established Dear Old Love Tumblr blog after she was dumped on Independence Day 2009 a year into a relationship. The site for the lovelorn describes itself as an anonymous safe haven for "short notes to people we've loved (or at least liked). Requested or unrequested." A selection of notes from the site was later turned into a book.

'A Different Kind of' Reunion

David Lee Roth fronts his first Van Halen record in 28 years

Album Review

It's the unofficial Thirteenth Law of Rock 'n' Roll: The band will always get back together. No matter how bitter the breakup, how unnecessary the reunion or how fraught the peace. Case in point: The first new David Lee Roth-fronted Van Halen album in 28 years, "A Different Kind of Truth," which appears to have been assembled with the diplomatic skills of a team of U.N. negotiators.

And yet, how can you not love it now that it's here, if only for the sheer unlikelihood of its existence? Most legacy acts limit themselves to reunion tours (Van Halen and Roth did this already, in 2007, and will tour again this year) without the added bother of recording new material. So it's even more of an accomplishment that Roth and the Van Halen brothers, the Hatfields and McCoys of dead-eyed '80s uber-metal, have (a) actually recorded an album of new material and (b) managed to do so without killing each other.

"Different Truth" is keyed more toward the frenetic, adrenal whomp of the first two "Van Halen" albums than to the synthy Top 40 buzz

A Different Kind of Truth
Van Halen

of later hits such as "Jump." It's a hard-rock album with the flimsiest of melodic pop underpinnings. It finds its groove as it goes along and ends up better than it started, mostly because it started with "Tattoo," the lukewarm and awkward first single.

The Van Halen brothers are still impossibly good at all the things they used to be good at, Roth slightly worse.

But future generations will likely see "Truth" as a curiosity, a souvenir from that brief, shining moment when Van Halen and Diamond Dave were back together and no one pressed charges. ALLISON STEWART (THE WASHINGTON POST)

Mixed Media

Smooth Sir Paul

It comes as something of a shock to report that PAUL MCCARTNEY'S new collection of mostly covers, "KISSES ON THE BOTTOM," works rather well. For his first adventure in vocal jazz, McCartney has wisely chosen Diana Krall's band to back him. On tracks such as "Home (When Shadows Fall)," the group provides a warm, spacious bed for McCartney's subtle vocal. So comfortable and energized does McCartney sound that the question is not why he decided to make a vocal jazz record, but why he hasn't done it before. ELIZABETH NELSON (THE WASHINGTON POST)

A Slice of Bayou Life

'Swamp People' has helped put Louisiana on the reality TV map

Premieres

HIST 9:00 Alligator hunters, raccoon wranglers and crawfish catchers in Louisiana's swamps and bayous are increasingly common on television.

Since the introduction of the History channel's wildly popular "Swamp People" in 2010, roughly a dozen other Louisiana-based reality shows have made their television debuts, among them Travel's "Girls, Guns and Gators," A&E's "Billy the Exterminator," History's "Cajun Pawn Stars" and Discovery's "Ragin' Cajuns."

The reason for the recent boom in Louisiana-based reality TV is twofold, says Louisiana Lt. Gov. Jay Dardenne. Not only do reality shows filmed in Louisiana take advantage of the state's TV and film tax credit program, but Louisiana also has a rich culture that makes for great entertainment.

"There's no question it's a combination of the two," says Dardenne, who sponsored the original 2002 bill granting credits for television and film production in Louisiana.

While some reality shows are far-fetched or have little to do with Louisiana, some are actually good for the state's image. A show like "Swamp People" (which starts a new season Thursday) features aspects of Louisiana life not found in any other state. It also educates people on issues including coastal erosion and conservation.

"It captures this interesting, fascinating, very unique aspect of Louisiana life with its beautiful landscape and a strong streak of adventure," Dardenne says. "It's not something you're going to find anywhere else." STACEY PLAISANCE (AP)

“The idea that sexists or homophobes can never be oppressors because they themselves are oppressed by racism is a non-argument. Black homophobes should and must be called out to create a safe community for all us sinners.”

—DREAM HAMPTON at Ebony.com/News-Views reacts to news that CNN contributor Roland Martin was suspended by the network for homophobic tweets he sent during the Super Bowl related to David Beckham's underwear ad for H&M.

“There are so many problematic things in this video. I don't even know where to start.”

—WTFWHITEPRIVILEGE.TUM-BLR.COM was stunned by a YouTube video in which stand-up comic Dave Ackerman, dressed in blackface, asked Brigham Young University students about Black History Month on camera.

“I can't speak definitively, but I could see this being just as good if not better than the previous three entries. I would actually be interested in seeing the series continue with new leads every couple of movies.”

—COMICSCONQUESTO.WORDPRESS.COM thought the trailer released Wednesday for “The Bourne Legacy,” which stars Jeremy Renner, was very appealing.

“Don't go speed dating or to any sort of singles events on Valentine's Day. Just don't. If you're going to do that, you might as well tattoo, 'I'm sad and desperate. Won't anyone just LOVE me already?!' on your forehead, because that's basically what you're broadcasting anyway.”

“A woman most would look at as being anorexic is being classified as a model. [Ioana] Spangenberg, 30, rings in on the scale at 84 lbs, but she wants us to believe that her weight is all natural, saying that she eats all that junk and fatty foods that would see most people pack on the pounds but not her. ... Not believable over here.”

—JUICYTINGS.COM isn't buying Spangenberg's story about her body, which earned her the nickname “the human hourglass.”

Horoscope

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) You can dig into a familiar routine today and enjoy doing what you know how to do very well. Family and friends give you feedback.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Take care that you don't say anything that could be taken the wrong way. You can't afford to have tensions increase at this time.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You may be waiting for someone in charge to give you the go-ahead for a new endeavor—but in the meantime you must consider options.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You may be unusually productive, but not in the way you would expect. The ideas that spring from your imagination are quite exciting.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) A game turns serious before the day is out—and you'll be in a position to show others what it means to play for keeps.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You may be feeling the pressure increase as expectations mount. You may want to consider saying no to a certain request.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You must keep your eye on the prize today, even as things become more confusing as a result of mixed messages elsewhere.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You needn't worry about another at this time, but rather it is actually you who may give cause for concern, but only temporarily.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Actions speak louder than words today, so take care that you do not affect anyone adversely by doing something that is ill advised.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Consider doing more to protect yourself and your finances at this time. There is more in the way of risk than you may be aware of.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) You may have to break a rule or two today in order to ensure that a vital message reaches its destination.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) A new idea has you excited about what may happen tomorrow, and the next day and the next. Supporters are swinging into action.
